

Dear member of parliament,

There are a lot of problems in our society. We want that you, as a member of parliament, help to reduce these problems.

Old people have many problems in their everyday life. One of these problems is the small script in books or newspapers. Old people can't read packages and sometimes don't know what they buy or take in. In some cases, e.g. medical pills it can evoke fatal consequences. It's important to read these package inserts because they describe the risks and side effects.

Another big problem is the irreducibility. This problem provides a lot of difficulties. For example in supermarkets. They can't get things which are high or down placed in the shelves. Old people have problems with stair climbing.

Therefore there must be more support for the elderly people and that means to have a decent life and enough people who care for them. The politicians need to take greater importance on this topic and the state should spend more money on educating staff and support the homes financially.

The second point is the youth. They have problems too and they also need the support of the government.

Young people need a safe place to stay. For example in clubs where they can do their homework, talk and play. But often it is too expensive and they were shut down. That is sad! The politicians should help the communities and cities to improve the places and employ social workers so that they can help the kids.

Sincerely

The German Comenius Team
